Acknowledgement

Many people have helped me get this work done.

First of all, I am grateful to my supervisor Bernhard Hurch, for his stimulating comments and discussions, for his encouragement, support and confidence in my work. To Ralf Vollmann, for sharing the interest in the topic and discussing with me especially the issue of lexical reduplication. To Eva Schultze-Berndt, for her attentive comments on several chapters of this work, and for providing me with very valuable literature.

Sincere thanks to my dear colleagues and "lunch mates" Dina El Zarka, Barbara Schrammel, and Ralf Vollmann for their daily support, for discussion and encouragement, especially in dispirited moments. Many thanks also to Angela Fessl, for the „reduplication finder" and her straightforward remedies for my troubles with technical questions.

Outside of the Institute of Linguistics in Graz, I want to thank the following linguists who provided me with precious data, contacts and other important information: Pier Marco Bertinetto, Isabelle Bril, Steven Fincke, Livio Gaeta, Nikolaus Himmelmann, Manfred Krifka, Jason Lobel, Richard Rhodes, Carl Rubino, Patricia Shaw.

I also owe many thanks to Anton Tenser for his reliable proofreading of this work.

Furthermore I am very grateful to the Office of International Relations and the Faculty of Humanities of the University of Graz for their financial support of my field trips, as well as to the staff of the Library of the University of Graz and the Library of the Bavarian State in Munich for their friendly help.

Special thanks to my family, my friends and to Michael for their concern, their encouragement, and their patience.

My deepest gratitude must be expressed to all the Philippine people who made an essential contribution to my research and my immersion into Philippine life and culture: Manuel Lobrigo, my indispensable language consultant in Graz, my first Bikol teacher and my most important contact person for all further research activities. Maria Ave Galeria and her family, friends and neighbors in Daraga, Legaspi, Dao and Calongay, for being my host and my guide, for the many hours she spent with me, for teaching me, and for organizing and transcribing speech recordings. Family Lobrigo, for being my generous host, providing me with delicious food, and taking care of me. Agnes Cabredo and Josefa Cabredo-Berces, the most precise and concentrated, ingenious and humorous consultants one can imagine. Merriam Maldo and her family for their great hospitality and their enjoyable Bikol stories. Blanca and Romeo Abanes for receiving me as a friend in their house in Dao, Pilar. Paul Mangitara for his funny anecdotes. Angela Lorenzana and all the helpful people at the Bicol University and at the library there. Many thanks also go to Carl Rubino for inspiring my interest in Philippine languages, and to his wife Grace Llenado and her family, Winnie and Beng Lleando, for hosting me so generously in Manila.

Last but not least, very special thanks to Thess, Che, Rodel, Francis, and Chonie with their friends and families: for their warm hospitality and friendship, for spending so much time with me and for showing and explaining to me (almost) the whole Bikol region.

Dedication

Para sa mga amigo ko sa Pilipinas.

Table of Contents

Acknowledgment i
Dedication ii
Table of Contents iii
Table of Figures vii

Chapter I: INTRODUCTION.....1

Chapter II: REDUPLICATION.....4

1 Definition of Reduplication.....4

2 Criteria for the classification of reduplication types.....6
2.1 Formal classification.....6
2.2 Functional classification.....8
2.3 Correspondence between form and function.....10

3 Distribution.....11

4 Brief history of the research on reduplication.....12
4.1 Typological approaches to reduplication.....12
4.2 Reduplication in Generative Grammar.....13
4.2.1 Wilbur 14
4.2.2 The copy-and-association model.....14
4.2.3 The full-copying model.....16
4.2.4 Reduplication in Optimality Theory.....17
4.2.5 Raimy's Readjustment Rule.....17
4.2.6 An alternative approach: The Morphological Doubling Theory (MDT).....18
4.3 Central questions/problems in the research on reduplication.....20

Chapter III: BIKOL.....23

1 The language and the data.....23

2 A short grammar sketch of Bikol.....26
2.1 Phonology and Morphonology.....26
2.1.1 The Phoneme inventory.....26
2.1.2 Nasal assimilation.....27
2.1.3 /h/-epenthesis.....28
2.1.4 /r/ and /l/.....28
2.2 Prosody.....29
2.2.1 Syllable Structure.....29
2.2.2 Stress.....29
2.2.3 Stress shift.....30
2.3 Spelling.....31
2.4 Syntax.....32
2.5 Morphology.....37

2.5.1 Voice- and TAM-affixes....37
2.5.2 Pronouns....41
2.5.3 Number....43
2.5.4 Morphological marking of properties and states 44
2.5.5 Further derivational affixes....46
2.6 Parts-of-Speech....47
2.6.1 Functional elasticity....47
2.6.2 Derivations....48
2.6.3 Roots....49
2.6.4 Conclusion....51

Chapter IV: THE REDUPLICATION SYSTEM OF BIKOL....53

1 Reduplication in the Austronesian language family....53

2 A survey of the reduplication types in Bikol....54

3 Lexical Reduplication....58
3.1 Introduction....58
3.2 Bisyllabic reduplicated roots....58
3.2.1 Origin and development....58
3.2.2 Child language expressions....60
3.2.3 Sounds and Movements....61
3.2.4 Animals, plants and Co....62
3.3 Lexical partial reduplication....64
3.3.1 Forms and origin....64
3.3.2 Diseases and plurality....65
3.3.3 Sounds....65
3.3.4 Animals, mythological figures and Co....66
3.3.5 General remarks on lexical partial reduplication....66
3.4 Lexical full reduplication....67
3.4.1 Form....67
3.4.2 Reversative movements....68
3.5 Echo-words....68
3.5.1 Form....68
3.5.2 Meaning....70
3.6 Summary....71

Excursus I: Iconicity of Reduplication....73

4 Productive reduplication....80
4.1 Partial reduplication....80
4.1.1 Introduction....80
4.1.2 Imperfective CV- reduplication....80
4.1.2.1 Form....81

Excursus II: The "Identity Constraint"....84

Excursus III: The Preference for the Unmarked Syllable in Reduplication. 89

4.1.2.1.1 Base of reduplication.....92
4.1.2.1.2 Imperfective reduplication and infixation.....94
4.1.2.1.3 Output Constraints.....94
4.1.2.2 Function.....95
4.1.2.2.1 Aspect marking for actions and events.....95
4.1.2.2.2 Continuative aspect in nominalized words.....97
4.1.2.3 Diachronic development of aspect systems in Central Philippine languages 99

Excursus IV: Grammaticalization of Reduplication.....101

4.1.3 CV-reduplication with numerals.....104
4.1.4 Infixal -Vr-reduplication for plural actors.....106
4.1.4.1 Form.....106

Excursus V: Infixes.....107

4.1.4.1.1 Diachronic development of Bikol -Vr-.....110
4.1.4.1.2 r-l-metathesis.....112
4.1.4.1.3 Infixal plural reduplication and other infixes.....113
4.1.4.2 Function.....114
4.1.4.3 Plural reduplication for ma-derived word forms.....116
4.1.5 Summary.....117

Excursus VI: Verbal Plurality.....118

4.2 Full reduplication.....123
4.2.1 Introduction.....123
4.2.2 Form and meaning of full reduplication.....124
4.2.2.1 Different accent patterns for different meanings?.....129
4.2.2.2 "Full reduplication" or rather "repetition"?.....130
4.2.3 The Curu- reduplicant: an alternative to full reduplication.....132
4.2.3.1 Prosodic conditions for the selection of the Curu-reduplicant.....132
4.2.3.2 Functions of Curu-reduplication.....134
4.2.3.3 The origin of Curu-reduplication.....135

Excursus VII: Reduplication with Fixed Segmentism.....136

4.2.4 Two different types of full reduplication in Bikol.....138
4.2.5 Specifications of the intended meanings.....140
4.2.5.1 One form – several meanings?.....140
4.2.5.2 Disambiguation of homonymous full reduplication type I and type II through the context.....141
4.2.5.3 Differentiation of the meaning nuances of type I through the interaction of the semantics of the base and reduplication.....143

4.2.5.4 Semantic and Cognitive explanations for polysemy of plural and diminutive....148
4.2.5.4.1 Regier....149
4.2.5.4.2 Kouwenberg and LaCharité....150
4.2.5.5 Polysemy as a strategy in optimization of language....152
4.2.6 Summary....154
4.3 Combinations of various reduplication types....156

5 Summarizing comments on reduplication in Bikol....158

Chapter V: CONCLUSIONS....160

1 Reference to the central questions of the research on reduplication....160

2 Further perspectives....163

References....165

Appendix A: Maps....183

Appendix B: Glossing abbreviations and symbols....185

Appendix C: Content of the dialogs, poems and stories of the corpus....186

Appendix D: List of Bikol reduplications....190
Bisyllabic reduplicated stems....190
Lexical partial reduplication....207
Lexical full reduplication....219
Echo words....235
Productive partial reduplication....240
Full (and Curu-) reduplication....245

Table of Figures

Figure 1. Marantz' description of Agta initial CVC-reduplication (Marantz 1982: 445) 15

Figure 2. Raimy's loop representation of kætkæt (Raimy 2000: 1) 18

Figure 3. Inkelas and Zoll's basic schema of the Morphological Doubling Theory (cf. Inkelas 2005: 65) 19

Figure 4. Genetic affiliation of some Philippine languages 24

Figure 5. McFarland's subgrouping of nine Bikol dialects 25

Figure 6. The iconicity continuum for reduplication 76

Figure 7. Rule for imperfective aspect reduplication 83

Figure 8. Stages of grammaticalization (Niepokuj 1997: 63) 101

Figure 9. Development path of reduplication (Bybee et al. 1994: 172) 102

Figure 10. Rule for numeral limitation 105

Figure 11. Rule for plural actor 106

Figure 12. Rule for the plural of ma-derived word forms 117

Figure 13. Rule for the diminutive of entities 144

Figure 14. Rule for the diminutive of unbounded events and states 145

Figure 15. Rule for the plural of bounded events 146

Figure 16. Rule for the plural of numerals 146

Figure 17. Regier's model: The interaction of iconicity and semantic extension (Regier 1998: 888) 149

Figure 18: Kouwenberg and LaCharité's model (Kouwenberg and LaCharité 2005: 540) ..150

Figure 19. Semantic categorization of the two full reduplication types of Bikol 155